

Students Get Lesson On Drunk Driving

Prom and graduation are often a time for high schoolers to let loose, but a local high school spent the day trying to show their students to be responsible.

Osseo-Fairchild High School Teens Against Destructive Decisions or TADD invited the "Save a Life" campaign to make students aware of the effects of drinking and driving.

The new drinking and driving simulator includes all the circumstances an individual would have when driving.

The student is sober... But the machine is designed to have the students feel intoxicated.

"I think they are definitely learning that if they drive drunk they have tunnel vision and they are at an increased risk and they also learned the seriousness of it.

More than 130 sophomores and juniors participated.
