Westwood Students Taught Dangers of Drunk Driving

Posted: Jan 30, 2008 07:10 PM EST

The "Save a Life Tour" is stopping in some of our hometowns.

On Wednesday, the group pulled into Westwood, Iowa, where they taught students about the dangers of drinking and driving. To prove their point, the students were given a chance to get behind the wheel for a drunk driving simulation test.

Westwood Schools Superintendent Kirk Ahrens says, "Their expectations are a high media presentation, a hands-on personal experience with a computer or in this case, a driving simulator. So we're hoping this offers a different way to reach those kinds of students."

The "Save a Life Tour" will be making other stops throughout our hometowns over the next two weeks.
